Owner Experience Review

Owners of the [Gamefish 30 FS](https://shestakov yachtsales.com/yachts-for-sale/builder/sea-hunt/gamefish-30-fs) from [SEA HUNT](https://shestakov yachtsales.com/yachts-for-sale/builder/sea-hunt) consistently frame it as a true dual purpose center console: equally at home chasing pelagics offshore and handling family day trips. Reports highlight a fish first cockpit with a mezzanine leaning post/captain's chairs, multiple livewells and fish boxes, and abundant in floor and bow storage that keeps tackle and gear organized. Livability remains squarely in dayboat territory, but the bow seating and overall layout make casual cruising and sandbar runs straightforward when the rods are stowed.

On the water, real world owner notes cite best speeds around 56 mph with twin Yamahas and a dependable cruise in the 37–40 mph range returning roughly 1.9 mpg, subject to sea state. Several owners point out that adding a Seakeeper introduces about 600 lbs, trimming top end and affecting performance. Maintenance feedback trends positive on the twin Yamaha reliability when serviced on schedule, though some users call out tight bilge/service access on older Gamefish iterations; prospective buyers should inspect access and review routine Yamaha service records shown in many listings.

Pros and Cons

• Strong offshore fishability with livewells, fish boxes, and an efficient cockpit layout.
• Real world cruise efficiency reported near 1.9 mpg at 37–40 mph in typical conditions.
• Versatile dayboat setup with bow seating and ample storage for mixed family and fishing use.
• Service access to bilge/systems can be tight on some older Gamefish models.
• Added Seakeeper weight (~600 lbs) can reduce top speed and affect performance.
• Center console layout limits overnight comfort to dayboat expectations only.
