Overview

Goddess of the Sea.

Sinuuous, soft and beautiful, this model is a real Venus, and the sea's waves seem to have been created especially to lap on the sides of her hull. The Riva flybridge, yet another model designed by Mauro Micheli and Officina Italiana Design, is the confirmation of the style and elegance typical of Riva yachts. An example of high quality craftsmanship, the Riva 75' Venere features a range of innovative solutions, from the vast windows in the cabins on the lower deck, to the stern that opens out onto a spacious swimming platform, ideal for free time and practicing water sports. The fly-bridge, designed to offer guests ample space and total comfort, features a comfortable, six seater sofa and awning equipped with an electric-hydraulic opening system. A harmoniously designed windscreen, made of grey metal and anthracite-coloured fibre glass screens the sundeck positioned in front of the bridge to protect guests from the wind. A refined crystal table in the dinette on the main bridge can seat eight, whilst the fitted galley, featuring a serving hatch connected to the dinette, can be accessed both from the bridge and side passage in order to provide a discrete passage for the crew. Available in the elegant standard version in elm or luxury version in black walnut, softness and elegance are enhanced by the shades of colour of the leather inserts in natural colours and dark brown which embellish walls and furniture in the interiors, too. On the lower deck, the vast main cabin, spanning the whole width of the yacht, has a study area, vanity unit with foldaway pouf, 30" LCD television and elegant walk-in wardrobe. Each cabin has direct access to an en-suite bathroom, and painstaking care has been taken over these "mini-suites." The result is a first class yacht, 23 metres of style and an example of modern design and luxury. The class of the Riva 75' Venere winks at the yard's tradition, stressing she is a Riva yacht. More aggressive than that of any other fly, the Riva 75' Venere features a modern line, thus appealing to a younger clientele, while still confirming the traditional, timeless beauty of all Riva yachts.
