Overview

Slip Knott is a 1985 Chris Craft Catalina 426 powered by twin Detroit Diesel 471 engines currently residing in a freshwater slip. She has a new VHF unit and a Garmin multi-function display. Cosmetically, she needs new carpet or equivalent flooring of choice in her state rooms and some other cosmetic uplifts to suit your personal tastes, but she has been priced to allow for such upgrades. She boasts a large flybridge and sundeck for outdoor covered living and entertaining. She also offers an Onan Generator and recently updated water heater. There are no remarkable odors in her interior or engine room.

DETAILED INFORMATION

42' Chris Craft Manufacturer Information

The Chris 425/426/427 Catalina began life back in 1971 as the Uniflite 42 Double Cabin. She turned out to be one of Uniflite's most popular boats and earned a reputation for sturdy construction and a practical, well-arranged interior. In 1984 Uniflite ceased operations when the company went bankrupt. Chris Craft bought the molds (as well as the old Uniflite production facility in Bellingham, WA) and resumed production of this model the following year, calling her the Chris 425 Catalina Double Cabin. While she looked exactly like the old Uniflite from the outside, the Catalina had a fresh interior layout with walk around queen berths fore and aft—something the Uniflite 42 never had during her production years.
