Overview

The Egg Harbor 43 Sport Fisherman remains one of the more handsome boats in her size class despite the fact that she's been out of production for well over a decade. Her balanced lines and muscular profile represent classic convertible styling at its best. The 43 was built on a stretched version of the Egg Harbor 41 Convertible hull with an additional 100 gallons of fuel for increased range. "Reel Lady" has a two-stateroom floorplan, featuring a single head and a mid-level galley. The teak joinery and paneling used throughout is impressive and very well crafted. Taken together, the upscale decor and roomy accommodations make the Egg 43 a comfortable boat for family cruising. Like many 1980s sportfishermen, the front windshield area was glassed over and painted to create a distinctive wraparound black "mask" surrounding the deckhouse. A pair of 685HP 671 TIB Detroit's cruise "Reel Lady" in the mid 20s and reach 27-28 knots top.
